

The BLACK BOX

Keep Your Eye Peeled for The Black Box

We went over to London unrecently and slipped E. Phillips Oppenheim ten thousand green boys to write our next serial. He did so and called it "The Black Box." It slips on the screen March 8th. Geel my pulse leaps as I read it. Be Peet the weird stuff. He's full of gray twilights, bleak moons, queer shapes, vague muttering, hoarse cries and delectables. And he's dumped the whole product in this yarn.

He loves to tie the hero in a knot and watch him dig his way out. Yes, an' he's always chuckin' things in his way. By the time Ec Pee's hero reaches the finish, he's tired enough to retire. And you've simply got to see this Black Box. Go around to your favorite theatre and ask its owner to book the thrilling thing. Tell him that E. Phillips Oppenheim is one of the greatest writers in the world and you want to see his imagination in moving pictures.

Ten thousand green lads! Think of it! Have you thought of it! All right. It shows you how far the UNIVERSAL will go to entertain the people of this country. It's the greatest film manufacturing concern in the world.

Come out to Universal City, which opens March 15th, and see the Black Box acted out. Go direct to Los Angeles by way of the Santa Fe, then take a trolley ride to Universal City and

IT WAS'N SOME PARTY, GEORG'SH, OL' TOP, IT WAS'N

George's Guests Made Merry at Del's All Night—So Did George.

NICKED FOR $10,000.

George Didn't Care, for He's Got $2,000,000 and a Good Job.

It was some birthday party George Bernheimer gave to celebrate his twenty-first anniversary and the fact he is going to work. It did not end until 4.30 this morning at Delmonico's. It is estimated to have cost him $10,000, but as he is worth a couple of million he didn't mind the expense. At 8 o'clock this morning his guests had an "old fashioned" breakfast of sauges, flannel cakes, ham and eggs and such things. Everybody was happy, and Mr. Bernheimer was ready right then to begin work, but his start is scheduled for to-morrow. He will thereafter report for work every morning at 7 o'clock at the Ruppert brewery, and if he holds out for three months he will be made President of his own beer-producing concern.

The little birthday celebration began before midnight. He had more than 100 guests at the start. During the night others dropped in.

George Bernheimer is six feet high and has a displacement of 200 pounds, which makes him quite a likely lad for his years. He became best known to Broadway because of the two million he inherited from his father, a member of the Bernheimer & Schwartz Brewing Company. Later he came into notice when for $12 he bought the two black winged bulls formerly guarding the staircase of the Cafe de Paris.

His party at Delmonico's is redolent of the Far East. The ballroom was renamed "The Oasis" for the occasion. Everybody knows what an oasis is. Well, that's what the ballroom was. The ceiling was concealed by a starred canopy, real palms waved and nodded about the walls, and at one end of the room was a pyramid. A Sphinx on a drop curtain was the only silent thing about.

Low tables, about the height of one's knee, set upon rare rugs, bore the supper. There's no use naming the dishes, because you couldn't pronounce them, but anyway it was a very wonderful Oriental supper. Seven at a table, at fourteen tables. Mr. Bernheimer's friends sat upon cushioned taborets which were only a few inches above the floor. The servers were all in Egyptian costume, with turbans, loose trousers, flowing jackets and striped girdles. At each place was a little copper camel, a little wire snake, a little tomato and a few other odds and ends. The invitations said the party was to be a "stake" affair. But when the men guests got there they were told that the first thing on the programme was to be dancing, and of course they couldn't dance with each other, and so—oh, well, as soon as the theatres were out and the choruses got a chance to change from the stage spangles to their own raiment and grab haxis there were all the dancing partners anybody wanted.

There were four corners to the room, naturally. Three of these were made into "cozy corners," with curtains that almost—not quite—hid the occupants from sight. The fourth was a bar, where any one could order anything desired. All four corners were well patrolled. Mr. Bernheimer's friend Joseph Fleischman, who once was Mayor of Cincinnati, wired him: "Congratulations on fiftieth birthday. Don't try to pull that twenty-one stuff on me." Others, too, accused him of being at least forty. But that isn't true. The suffragette vote of the evening was that he was a wonder, no matter how old or young he might be. The party broke up at 11 A. M. to-day.

FOUR OF FAMILY BURNED.
EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., Feb. 24.—John Stutman, his two daughters, Flor, 18, and Mabel, 16, and his son, Harold, 14, were burned to death early to-day when fire starting in a grocery store rapidly consumed the entire building. The Stutman family occupied a floor above the market. Dean Stutman, another member of the family, dropped to safety from a window.
